

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Case No.: 1:19-CR-00018-ABJ

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,

Plaintiff,

v.

ROGER J. STONE, JR.,

Defendant.

MOTION TO COMPEL COMPLETE REPORT OF THE SPECIAL COUNSEL

The Special Counsel drafted a Report regarding his investigation into any links and/or coordination between the Russian government and individuals associated with the campaign of President Donald Trump, and any matters that directly arose from that investigation.<sup>1</sup> Roger Stone has been indicted by the Special Counsel pursuant to the appointment by the Deputy Attorney General who authorized the investigation. Roger Stone, through counsel, has a right to review the Special Counsel's full Report. Roger Stone is the only person with a compelling case for standing to demand the Report and his demand is pursuant to the Fifth and Sixth Amendments. His lawyers must be allowed to review the Report in its entirety because it contains the government's evidence and conclusions on matters essential to Stone's defense. Starting with the base assumptions by the Special Counsel that Russians hacked the Democratic National Committee, Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee, and Clinton Campaign email databases (see Indictment, ¶¶ 1-3, 7, 18, 20, 39); and ending with decisions why others were selectively not prosecuted for overtly committing similar offenses, and who are likely witnesses in the case (see Indictment, ¶¶ 9, 13, 14, 28, 30, 32, 33, 34, 37 – “Person 1,” and passim, “Person 2”). To be clear, Stone is not requesting the Report be disclosed to the world – only to his counsel so that it may aid in preparing his defense.

The limited disclosure of the Report to defense counsel will likely support Stone’s constitutional argument that there was no referral from Congress to the Department of Justice. Argued in a companion motion contemporaneously filed, Congress did not refer Stone’s case to the Department for investigation. Because there was no referral from Congress, the Special Counsel’s investigation was a violation of the separation of powers, particularly since a proactive, self-initiated investigation violates the Appointment Order as well as the Constitution. Furthermore, without a referral from Congress and without the presentation of any witness present in the House Committee room when Stone appeared, no one testified to the Grand Jury that Stone’s testimony was material to the House Committee’s investigation. Indeed, the Special Counsel would have to prove at trial that a conspiracy existed to interfere with the 2016 presidential election and that it involved the Russian government, before Stone could be charged with obstructing an investigation into that Russian conspiracy. In fact, the Attorney General stated as much in a memo he wrote: “. . . the President’s motive . . . could not have been ‘corrupt’ unless the President and his campaign were actually guilty of illegal collusion.” (Memorandum, Bill Barr to Deputy Attorney General Rosenstein, June 8, 2018 at 3) (attached as Exhibit 2). Therefore, the entire theory of obstruction is “entirely dependent on first finding collusion. . .” Id. Either the Special Counsel’s Report provides the answer to these questions or it does not; either way, the Report will provide evidence necessary to prepare a defense for trial or provide evidence to support motions to dismiss.

Furthermore, Jerome Corsi and Randy Credico are witnesses for the prosecution. They both could have been charged with lying to the FBI or the grand jury. Neither was charged with any crime. Indeed, Corsi disclosed to the world a draft of an Indictment, Statement of Facts, and Plea Agreement sent to him by the Special Counsel's Office for his signature. Certainly there must be an explanation for that sequence of events. The Report would likely explain why those documents and criminal charges were not pursued. Stone would be entitled to know why the Special Counsel's position changed vis a vis Corsi and why it allowed Credico to remain in a state of grace. See Brady v. Maryland, 373 U.S. 83 (1963); Giglio v. United States, 405 U.S. 150, 154 (1972); Napue v. Illinois, 360 U.S. 264, 269 (1959); United States v. Bagley, 473 U.S. 667, 675 (1985); Kyles v. Whitley, 514 U.S. 419 (1995).

The law in this Circuit comes from review of the Independent Counsel statute. In those cases, the courts considered whether the Independent Counsel reports should be disclosed to the public. See In re North, 16 F.3d 1234 (1994) (Iran-Contra). North required the Special Counsel to provide a closing report which he completed. See 28 C.F.R. § 600.8(c). Most prosecutions do not provide a report during an investigation and trial, but the SCO was required to create one (they are now required to produce them to criminal defendants). The Independent Counsel was appointed by the judiciary. North, 16 F.3d at 1239. The Special Counsel, however, was not. The Court, therefore, should not be concerned whether the public would consider the Report as having the imprimatur of the judiciary. See Id. at 1240.

North is guiding here: “[u]pon reflection on all the arguments brought before us, and on all the things and matters of record, we conclude that it is in the public interest that this matter of extended national controversy be afforded as full a conclusion as possible. Therefore, rather than extend the controversy over the supposed, reported, or suspected contents of the Report, we have determined that the public interest will be served by actual disclosure.” Id. at 1246.

Generally, the concern would be that innocent witnesses or others might suffer a reputational attack if they are exposed as being investigated or mentioned in a Report. See In re Cisneros, 426 F.3d 409, 412 (D.C. Cir. 2005). That would not be the situation here because Stone is requesting private disclosure to his defense team for review. Since North, the Courts have consistently disclosed Reports produced by the Independent Counsel. In re Espy, 259 F.3d 725, 730 (D.C. Cir. 2001); In re Special Proceedings, 842 F. Supp. 2d 232, 236 (D.D.C. 2012) (Sen. Ted Stevens). The Court has a Protective Order in place regarding discovery that would apply in full force and effect to the Special Counsel’s Report. (Dkt. # 22).

CONCLUSION

The Court should grant Roger Stone’s motion to compel the Office of Special Counsel’s Report. The Report would be reviewed by defense counsel subject to the Protective Order currently in place and any references to the Report would be made under seal.

Respectfully submitted,
